Interested in getting more involved in supporting local news? Consider serving on our Board of Directors

The Salish Current believes in the strength, power and compassion of community.

For four years, our free, independent, nonprofit online news organization has offered deep, not just broad, understanding of the community. We aim to reflect the range of perspectives and points of view found here.

To do that we need the thinking, support and insight of people like you. That’s why we want you to consider joining our board of directors. The board guides the strategic direction of the newspaper and helps support its mission of “reporting local news with independence and strict journalistic integrity, providing fact-based information and a forum for civil commentary.”

Other commercial news organizations provide day-to-day happenings within the community; the Salish Current seeks to uncover knowledge, not just information.

It explains instead of just describes, to emphasize the essence or core of what is going on rather than just facts, figures and data; and to give people the context and perspective they need to make sense of what is going on around them and with issues that affect them.

It is a critical task in our increasingly complex and polarized society. We think you have the knowledge and skills to help us. Please look at our website — salish-current.org — then contact our president, Betsy Gross, to set up a time to talk about working with us to provide our readers hope and a sense of possibility in dealing with public challenges.

Thank you.
